Happy New Year!

Let's Face Facts

Anyone who actually believes that an inanimate object is capable of controlling a person's actions is just plain stupid... a moron.

Unfortunately, morons tend to be LOUD, relying on emotion rather than rational thinking.

Bullet Seating Depth

Most rifles will "prefer" to have bullets a certain distance off the lands for best accuracy. Surprisingly, though, the exact number of that distance isn't important to know - as long as you can seat the bullet to that gun's best "off lands" distance, it doesn't matter if you know where the lands are or what that exact distance measurement is.

Here's how I do it.

For a new gun, I start loading my chosen bullet at the reloading manual (SAAMI) maximum overall length, or the maximum length that will feed through the action, whichever is longer. I work up the best powder and charge combo I can find at that length.

Now, I'll determine if a deeper seating depth might be an improvement. I seat the same bullet over the same charge, but seat it a tiny bit deeper each time. I'll either turn in the seating stem a bit at a time (a quarter-turn) or use increments of .010" measured by a micrometer seating stem or by measuring the stem extension with a caliper. If I see a definite improvement at a given seating depth, I may try two "tweak" depths at .005" either side of that depth.

Finally, I'll find out just where that depth is. To do so, I scribe a mark on the bullet at bore diameter. This is NOT at groove depth, but at land-land distance, which is the nominal bore diameter. Examples would be at .220" for a .22-caliber, .250" for a .25-caliber, .300" for a .30-caliber and so forth.

I set my calipers at the desired point (example .250") and lock the jaws, then lightly spin the bullet between the sharp part of the jaws. The result will be a marked bullet, as shown:

Now measure from that line to the base of the loaded cartridge. This is your optimum "Base to Bore" dimension for that rifle. It will be valid for almost ANY bullet, no matter what nose profile. If you change bullets, simply mark the new bullet with the same scribed line, using your calipers, and seat it to the same Base to Bore distance. The new bullet will then be the same "off lands" distance as your first bullet.

Do check that any new bullet still fits the magazine and feeds. And do record your best "Base to Bore" measurement for that gun. That's it.

Politics & Legislation

by John Faro, Political Junkie

We start the New Year with our hearts saddened by the deaths of twenty beautiful children and six courageous adults. Please keep these people, young and old, in your prayers for 2013.

The advocates of feel good anti-gun legislation are charging forward with their agenda to make all of us safer by disarming as many law-abiding citizens as possible. The logic of their reasoning is beyond comprehension. We will have to be ever vigilant if we are going to maintain our Constitutional rights.

The legal counsel for Pro-Gun New Hampshire stated in a Union Leader article that "New Hampshire is not keeping guns from the mentally ill." (Tuesday, December 18, 2012, page A4.) If memory serves me correctly convicted felons and persons adjudicated as mentally ill are PROHIBITED from owning or possessing firearms. It has been proposed that mental health records be part of the National Instant Check System (NICS). This idea would have merit if there was a mechanism to correct mistakes and people who truly have mental problems, not folks who are having a bad day that yell at someone in a public place or lose their temper in public get dumped into the system forever with no recourse to get their names expunged from the system.

The New Hampshire House rules committee has voted 6 to 4 to reinstate the ban on guns in and around the House chamber. The proposed rule needs adoption by the full House when it convenes in formal session on January 2nd. House Republicans have vowed a floor fight on the issue. Rep. Pamela Tucker (R-Greenland), stated "This is a senseless rule. We have a right to self-defense as a natural right in our Constitution; I don't really want to create another defenseless zone and that being in the State House of all places." The House Rules Committee has a majority of Democrats if you are wondering how this could happen.

Some Republicans see this as a sign of things to come. House Republican Leader Gene Chandler (R-Bartlett), said the move was a first strike by Democrats eager to undo a lot of recent legislative history.

One of the issues the Democrats have in their cross-hair sights is the recently passed what is known as the Stand Your Ground legislation. The right to defend yourself where ever you have a legal right to be, not just in your home or on your property, wherever you are.

If you check the New Hampshire Legislature web site you will find that approximately 8,100 Legislative Services Request (LSR) have been filed for consideration for this coming session. Not all of these are firearms related but just less than 1,000 have some type of wording that involve firearms or the use of firearms.

Depending on how the wording of these LSR's end up after they have been translated into what I call legalese will determine if they are good or not so good for the firearms community.

Keep your eyes open and your powder dry. We are in for a rough ride this legislative session.
