Granite State Bowhunters 3-D Archery Match

8 September 2013
All Archers Welcome
This Event is Open to the Public

The .357 Magnum has become one of the most ubiquitous cartridges in the United States, if not the world. There are rifles, semiautomatic pistols, and of course, revolvers chambered for it. Some 65 years after its introduction, it remains the pre-eminent medium bore handgun round on the market. Despite more powerful cartridges available, there are few, if any, that match the .357's versatility and broad appeal. The .357 can trace its roots back to a free market and its responses to consumer demand.

Velocity?

In the early part of the 20th century, American firearms companies placed little import on increased handgun cartridge muzzle velocity. Early smokeless powder cartridges, such as the .44 WCF and the .45 Colt were designed to mimic the performance of their progenitor black powder loads. As late as 1929, only one American handgun cartridge was being produced with a velocity in excess of 1,000 feet per second: the Colt .38 Automatic, which had remained in comparative obscurity since its introduction in 1904. This was in no small part due to the fact that the only firearms chambered for the .38 Automatic, were the old Colt "parallel ruler" pistols that dated to before the turn of the century. The round was quite good, with a muzzle velocity of 1,150 fps with a 130 grain bullet, and capable of very good accuracy at long ranges.

Bulletproof Vests and Bad Guys

During World War I, a number of products were marketed as bullet proof vests, were tested by the military. As it turned out, these were unsuited for use by soldiers, being cumbersome and heavy, and vulnerable against rifle fire. However, in the post-war gangster era, these vests became very popular with the underworld, when it was realized that they would effectively stop almost all handgun bullets. This worked out well for the criminals for a while, as the police at that time were dedicating Government Model .45 autos to serious business, and the slow .45 ACP was easily stopped by the vests. Many tests were conducted, demonstrating that currently available police equipment could not defeat the vests. The problem was turned over to Colt. They found that the vest would stop every round from every gun, including the 45 ACP and 45 Colt, except for the virtually forgotten .38 Automatic. That cartridge punched a neat little hole right through the vest. To increase the round's efficacy, Colt increased the muzzle velocity to 1,300 fps, and the .38 Super Automatic cartridge was born. The new cartridge was adopted by many police agencies, including the FBI, and performed well, not only on armored vests, but on automobiles as well.

The .357 Magnum

Smith & Wesson Reacts

As may well be suspected, the Smith & Wesson corporation was not happy to see its regular police customers leaving! The K frame S&W revolver chambered for the .38 S&W Special had been a very popular police sidearm, but its ammunition simply couldn't punch holes in armored vests. In 1933, S&W compared the .38 Special and the .38 Super. Bullet diameters and weights were similar, with the .38 Super at .359" with 130 grain bullets, and the .38 Special at .357" and 158 grains. Muzzle velocity and energy, however, were vastly different, with the .38 Super Automatic at 1,300 fps and 487 ft-lbs, compared to the 847 fps and 252 ft-lbs of the .38 Special. Things were not coming up roses for S&W.

However, there was one area where there was room to grow. The .38 Super had a length of 1.27" while the .38 Special measured 1.55." While there was still substantial space available for additional powder in the .38 Special, the .38 Super was packed to capacity. Experimentation demonstrated that additional powder could be safely added to the .38 Special case. In deference to the new cartridge's increased recoil and increased pressure, a new revolver was developed for it by mating a .44 frame with a cylinder and barrel bored for the .38. S&W called this gun the ".38/44 Heavy Duty", and the ammunition was designated .38/44, so as to differentiate it from the standard .38 Special. Ballistically, the new cartridge was a success, coming within a few feet per second and a few foot pounds of the .38 Super, and slicing through both armor and automobiles with ease.

Enter Elmer Keith

Smith & Wesson didn't rest on its laurels with the .38/44. While the .ne gun held the fort with respect to market share, the company set out to settle the issue with the .38 Super once and for all. With Keith's assistance, the experiments with the .38 Special and the .38/44 continued. The powder charge was consistently increased until a cartridge was developed that would launch the 158 grain bullet at some 1,515 fps muzzle velocity with 807 ft-pds of muzzle energy. Tests showed that while the heat-treated cylinders would withstand the new round's great pressure, recoil was a problem. The solution was to design yet another new revolver. The final product retained the general lines of the .44 frame while adding metal to various portions of the gun, and restoring the top rib to the barrel, which had not been seen on large frame S&W guns since the .44 Russian. With an 8 3/4" barrel, the weight of the new gun came in at 47 ounces - a weight not seen since the days of the Colt Dragoon! The new model was named Magnum, to indicate its unparalleled status, and was chambered to allow use of standard .38 Special, .38/44, or .357 Magnum ammunition. However, in order to avoid the unpleasant consequences if the new ammunition were used in an ordinary .38 Special, the case was lengthened about 1/8" so as to prevent a .38 Special cylinder closing on the Magnum cartridge.

Threatened by a Colt product, S&W replied with not one but two products. One, the .38/44 paralleled the Colt cartridge, and the other, the .357 Magnum, far surpassed it. The .357 Magnum is proof that necessity is the mother of invention.

Your Right to Defend Yourself?

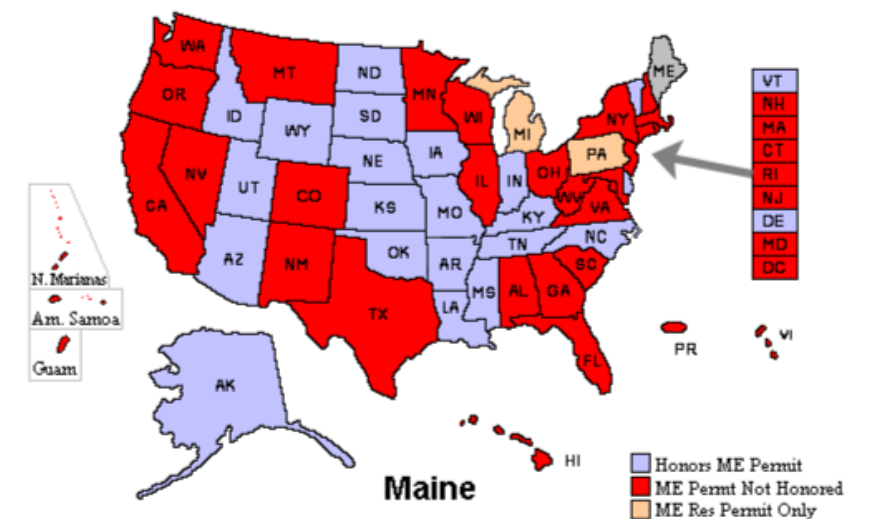

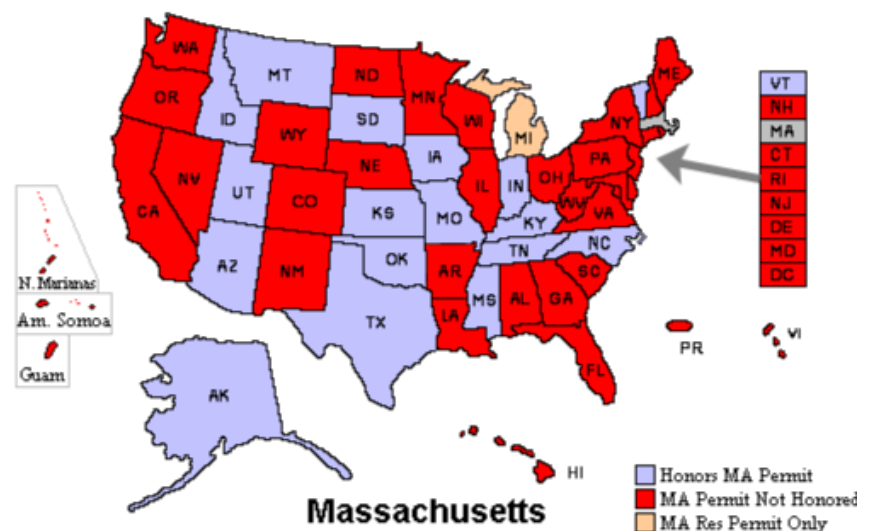

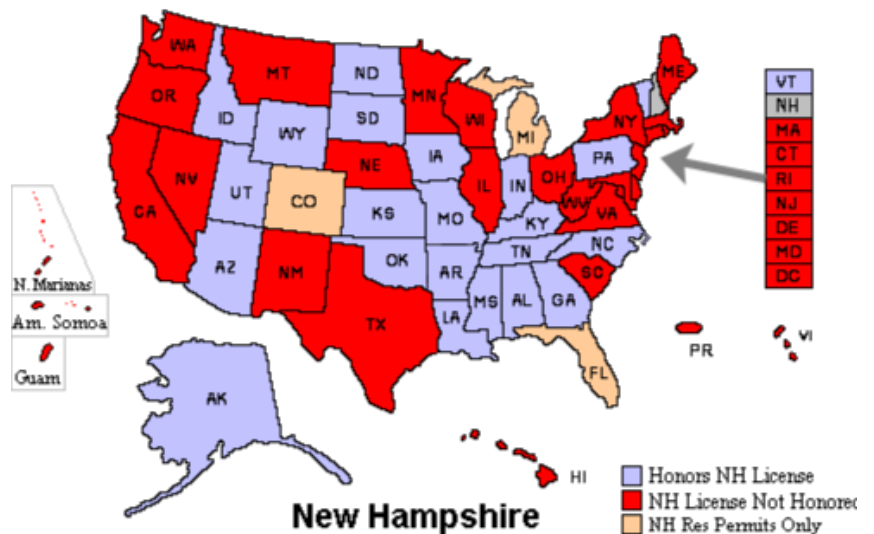

These maps show where you can legally carry a concealed firearm if you have a New Hampshire, Massachusetts, or Maine License to Carry a Concealed Weapon.

New Hampshire honors Resident Licenses from Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Utah, and Wyoming. New Hampshire does not honor Non-Resident Permits or Licenses. You must be a resident of the state they honor for your permit to be valid in New Hampshire.

Massachusetts doesn't honor any other states' licenses at all.

Like New Hampshire, Maine only honors Resident Licenses or Permits, and only from Arkansas, Delaware, Louisiana, Michigan, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, and Wyoming.

Who Ya Gonna Call?

If you have a comment, concern, or question about a particular item, event, or aspect of the Club, please consult the "Club Contacts" page for who to get in touch with. There's a copy of the list in every newsletter, it's on the Club Website, and it's posted at various places around the Club as well.

There are a good number of responsible people at Country Pond Fish & Game Club, and we've tried to divide up those responsibilities so that no one gets overloaded. If you've always gone to one particular person for everything, that doesn't mean you should continue to do so. That one person isn't supposed to do "everything" and it's not fair to assume that they will. Besides they'd probably just have to refer you to the correct person anyway.
